The electronic journal

"Economic Sociology" was established by Vadim Radaev in 2000 as one of the first academic journals in Russia. It is funded by the National Research University – Higher School of Economics since 2007.

For more than 12 years "Economic Sociology" has represented the mainstream of thinking and research in international and Russian economic sociology.

Being one of the Russian sociology's leading scholarly refereed journals, "Economic Sociology" plays a key role in consolidating international standards of studies in economic sociology, demonstrating new research papers by Russian and international scholars, introducing new studies and research projects, attracting young scholars into the field, and sharing the best practices of teaching. Each issue contains new translations of "contemporary classics", including celebrated and most cited works published in 1990–2000 years.

"Economic Sociology" still remains the only specialized academic journal in the field of economic sociology and holds one of the leading positions among all Russian sociological journals.

"Economic Sociology" is a bimonthly journal released in five issues in annual volume (January, March, May, September, and November). Each issue is published in the 3rd decade of the month declared. No issue for the 12 years was late.

"Economic Sociology" provides permanent free access to all issues. Each issue is provided in PDF-format.

"I wish your readers the best. Economic sociology is a vibrant enterprise that pushes forward a research and social agenda that can be helpful to policy makers and practitioners alike. I hope the art and practice of economic sociology works well for them".

Neil Fligstein,
University of California at Berkeley

"Congratulations on your 10th Anniversary! Vadim Radaev has done an extraordinary job of leading this journal, and so a special congratulations to him. As a field, economic sociology is at a particular exciting stage. Over the next ten years, it will see new theories and new methods. I am confident that the Russian online journal, 'Economic Sociology', will make an important contribution to that development".

David Stark,
Columbia University

"These are crucial times for economic sociology. With standard economic models dramatically undermined by the 2008 economic crisis, economic sociologists have the opportunity and responsibility to propose alternative accounts. Such better-informed explanations of economic processes matter both for scholarly advance and for superior social policy. The Russian web-journal 'Economic Sociology' celebrates 10 years of efforts in that direction. I congratulate the journal and wish it all the best for its second decade".

Viviana Zelizer,
Princeton University

"Economic Sociology" meets all standards of an academic journal including blind peer-review procedure (two referees for main articles), editing, proofreading, and professional design layout.

The journal has ISSN 1726-3247 and is officially registered in the Federal Service for Supervision in the Area of Telecom, Information Technologies and Mass Communications (Electronic No. 77-8029).

"Economic Sociology" was included into the Russian Scientific Citation Index in 2009. It holds the 4th position among all Russian sociological journals. Two-year Impact Factor of the journal (Russian citation index) achieves 0.618.

"Economic Sociology" became one of the first electronic journals included in the list of leading journals officially recognized by the Higher Attestation Commission of the Russian Federation in 2010.

"Economic Sociology" has been carrying out an annual nationwide grants competition among research papers since 2006. Papers of the winners were published in the journal.
